In the distance,
the steam train
approached over the
bridge;

Jack
skilfully
rode his
surfboard
to the shore.

The scuba diver swam
deep below the ocean's
surface;

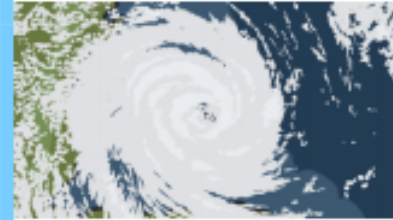

there was
three-
quarters
left for the rest of the family.

Charlie devoured a
large piece of delicious
apple pie;

John had
packed
shorts,
shirts,
flip-flops
and straw
hat.

Due to the high
winds, the tall trees
were bent sideways;

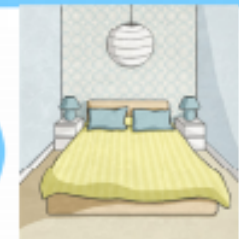

the car
waited
patiently
behind the
barriers of
the level
crossing.

The chrysalis began to
split slowly open;

Zak kindly offered to help her
up off the floor.

The cars collided
together on the main
road;

there was no one to be seen in his bedroom.

Freddie quickly opened his eyes;

a beautiful, colourful butterfly emerged and fluttered away.

The hungry cheetah sprang from behind the tall grass;

several tropical fish darted in and out of the coral.

The two volleyball players leapt up to defend the shot;

the hurricane was now at full force.

The over-loaded suitcase would barely close;

the team were close to winning the Olympic title.

The high waves splashed onto the beach;

the traffic lights had malfunctioned.

Kelly had tripped over her shoelace;

the poor gazelle ran for its life.
